I dreamed a Journey...

I dreamed a journey. That I was alive. That I was free and truly alive. The windows were rolled down and William Fitzsimmons was blasting on the radio, singing the saddest song that I have ever loved. The gas tank was half full which meant I could go another good 200 miles before having to stop. I dreamed that I was standing on the side of the road and the piano that had become like a close friend had been delicately placed under a towering Redwood in Northern California. Beside a glassy lake in Wyoming. In the snow white sand of New Mexico. Beneath a looming blood red arch in Utah. And in all of these, he pulled her close and whispered the Goodness in her ear and she melted. Right there, melted.

We had all traveled long distances to be here. Some more than others but deep down we all realized that few others would ever experience a moment such as this and each couple seemed to appreciate this more than the last. Every decision I had made up to this point was meant to bring me here. Not for money or fame. But simply for the sake of being here to take this one journey. To take this one picture. And I had never felt so alive...

5584 miles, 19 days, 9 couples, 6 states, 1 piano, and me.

The journey begins October 13 and I would like to invite you to join me on my epic quest. Sessions are limited to 1 shoot per location so please reserve yours early.
